

Everything at Kimpton's George Hotel is a nod to George Washington: A huge pop art dollar bill is framed in the lounge, the walls are papered with Washington's handwritten inaugural address, and cheeky presidential artwork is displayed throughout the hotel. From about $239; hotelgeorge.com

Where to STAY

The Line DC, set to open this month in the Adams Morgan neighborhood, is housed in a 20th-century church. Guest rooms look onto the Washington Monument, and James Beard-honorees Spike Gjerde and Erik Bruner-Yang are in charge of food and drink. From $268; thelinehoteldc.com

If you're open to a splurge, consider The Jefferson, just blocks from the White House. Spa treatments incorporate botanicals grown in Monticello's gardens, and there's an on-property Michelin-starred restaurant, Plume. From $525; jeffersondc.com
